The Salisbury University TRIO Student Support Services Program ("TRIO SSS") is designed to accomplish university and federal legislative purposes to increase retention, persistence, and graduation rates for students who are first generation, low-income, and/or have a disability. While funded through the Department of Education, the program objectives are aligned with university priorities related to access, affordability, diversity and inclusion, and student success.

Nearly 2,900 (or 39%) of SU enrolled domestic undergraduates are potentially eligible. SU's TRIO SSS recruits, screens, selects, and aims to retain 150 participants which is about 5% of eligible students. Participants must be a U.S. citizen, a national, or meet residency requirements for federal student aid; first generation; low income; or have a disability. Participants must also demonstrate academic need based on below average standardized test scores (e.g., ACT composite score), academic probation, and/or receiving grades below a "C" in or a record of withdrawing from general education or major courses. Need for the program is based on persistent performance gaps on critical academic indicators. Three-year averaged institutional research data show that potentially eligible students are performing below their non-eligible peers: lower retention rates (77% compared to 85%), lower graduation rates (59% compared to 69%), and lower grade point averages (-.12 gap). Need for the program is also justified by significant academic, financial, transition and acclimation, and other problems among potentially eligible students such as lack of preparedness for graduate education and limited or no knowledge of workplace competencies or civic responsibilities.

The program design is evidence-based, theoretically anchored, and informed by Vincent Tinto's theory of institutional departure and George Kuh's landmark research on student engagement. Academic, financial, career, and other services offered include assistance with course selection; financial literacy; advising on financial aid options; career development; mentoring; graduate school preparation; an early arrival transition experience; cultural enrichment; and a "Master Class" series addressing personal responsibility, empowerment, resilience, time management, study strategies, and civic responsibility. Supplemental grant aid is offered to engaged students to reduce dependency on loans and increase likelihood for persistence toward graduation.

Program design also includes two federal competitive preference priorities focused on (1) fostering flexible and affordable paths to obtaining knowledge and s

Our fiscal year is September 1 – August 31, each year. This is

- (e.g., Financial literacy, understanding money management, and financial aid information)
- (e.g., Workplace competencies, assessment inventories, résumé creation and improvement)
- (e.g., Cultural and educational exposure not usually available to students)
- (e.g., Resilience, personal empowerment, lifelong success)

All programs are targeted and attended by only TRIO Program Participants who actively enrolled at Salisbury University during the 2022 – 2023 school year. The demographics include students who are either first-generation, low-income or have a physical, mental, or learning disability. This also includes non-traditional students and students from satellite campuses including Cecil College, the University System of Maryland at Hagerstown, and University System of Maryland at Southern Maryland. The TRIO Bridge Program students are both first-year traditional students and transfer students. Lastly, our programming was generally geared towards the middle of the week, on the days of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday; with the exception of the Bridge Program.
